Christmas is the most important celebration in many countries. Christians celebrate the birth of Jesus Christ on December 25 even though they do not know exactly when Jesus was born. On Christmas Eve, many of them go to church to attend a religious ceremony called the Christmas Mass. It is also the time for family reunions when members of the family get together to celebrate. They enjoy a big dinner and exchange gifts on Christmas Day. Christmas celebrations are more or less the same in Western countries. However, there are some slight differences.

In Austrian, Christmas is the big event of the year. The Austrian people always use real trees, not plastic trees, to decorate their houses. They usually eat fish, chicken and goose for Christmas dinner.

In England, children hang their stockings by the fireplace, hoping that Santa Claus will fill them with gifts and sweets. The English have turkey for their Christmas dinner like Americans and decorate their houses with Christmas trees the way Germans do.

The German people celebrate Christmas by having a big meal. Roast pork or ham is the main dish of their Christmas dinner. They place presents and sweets on a special Christmas table. They were the first people to put up Christmas trees in their houses. Some houses are also decorated with the scene of the birth of Christ.

In the Netherlands, children leave a clog or a wooden shoe in front of the fireplace. If they have been throughout the year, Santa Claus fill it with sweets. The Dutch go to church and have Christmas dinner on Christmas Day. After the dinner, the whole family usually goes ice-skating on frozen canals.

In Norway, on Christmas Eve, many families go out into the forests to cut their Christmas trees and take a horse or a sleigh-ride home through the snow. On that same evening, the tree is decorated the whole family sits down to a big meal together.
